Introduction

February 1942 search lights are pointed to the sky on an unidentified flying object hovering over Los Angeles. At 2:25am the army announced it to be a hostile aircraft and the city's air raid sirens went off. The army had a lock on its target and began to fire at this object up in the sky. They ended up firing 1,433 rounds into the air that night. According to Secretary Of The Navy there was no air raid or enemy planes in the area. He said it was just nerves because of what had happened at Pearl Harbor. An army document was released and said they released weather balloons that night with flashing lights on them. So was this just a big misunderstanding or did the attack on this craft scare the UFO away that night?

Findings

Public records from this report were carefully studied and researched however nothing new was found to add to the investigation. Military officials were contacted but maintained that it was not a UFO incident. Some officials also refused to comment on the subject.
