Introduction

Jody LeCornu pulled into the now-defunct Caldor discount department store parking lot in Baltimore, Maryland in the early morning hours of Saturday, March 2, 1996 when witnesses said a man driving a white BMW pulled up behind Jody's white Honda Civic. He got out of his car and approached her vehicle.

Witnesses describe this man as an African American about 5'10" to 6'2" weighing 200-220 pounds. He seemed to be between the ages of 20-30, with a stocky build and wearing an Army green camouflage-style jacket.

Jody rolled her window down and the two exchanged words, before the man turned and walked back towards his car. Before reaching his car, he turned back around to face Jody's car, drew a handgun, and fired through the rear passenger window of her car, hitting Jody in the back.

Bleeding and wounded, Jody was able to drive across the street and into Giant Food grocery store parking lot, where she circled and stopped at a curb between the Firestone Complete Auto Care shop and the Boston Market.

The shooter followed Jody across the street in his car, and, once again pulled up beside her car and approached her vehicle. He reached across Jody's lap, put the car in park, and took something from the car. Witnesses say he left the scene and drove southbound on York Road.

Findings

After initial investigation carried out by the local police department, it was of interest for IBPIR to obtain records of the initial investigation to try and locate any vital information that may have been missed during the initial investigation.

It was however of our findings that the police department had failures surrounding the whole investigation. Agents report that the police had failed to keep the family members informed of the investigation and also failures were found with the actual investigation where officers had not fulfilled their duties and responsibilities.

IBPIR decided that it would open up an official investigation and initiated an appeals program for any information that would be vital to the case. Aside from the information already gathered, no new information was presented and the appeals was granted further time, but in January 2025, the appeals process was paused. After a careful review, a report was made and submitted to conclude the case. This was based on certain factors.

The factors included were that of no new information was presented. Another factor was that the murder had taken place in 1996 and according to initial reports, there were no CCTV footage of the incident that had taken place.

The description of the suspect was as detailed as possible from witnesses, however following the police investigation and the fact that no suspects were ever brought in for questioning meant that because there was such a large time limit, it would be impossible to go by that description today unless however DNA evidence was found, and even if that was so, the police report did not suggest that any evidence was found.

The final factor within this investigation was that agents found no conclusive motive for the murder other than their own personal conclusions which will not be shared within this report for confidential and mis-leading reasons.

Recommendations

Overall, the recommendations that were made from this report were that of no further investigation is warranted. There is sufficient evidence to conclude the investigation based on the initial police investigation and the factor that no new evidence was found.

Conclusion

To conclude this report, the findings show that the evidence presented is that of inconclusive. IBPIR had exhausted all resources and was therefore no longer to be able to extend the investigation. The final conclusion is that the investigation will remain concluded unless sufficient evidence is presented to trigger a re-investigation.
