Introduction

Kenny Veach - hiker who went missing in November 2014 under mysterious circumstances. To date the hiker has still not been found despite efforts from search parties and local authorities.

Kenneth Lee Veach also known as snakebitmgee was an American YouTuber who posted videos of his hiking trip to his channel, who disappeared in November 2014.

Veach prided himself on the physical toll he would put himself through on his hikes, in one comment claiming that "My hikes are brutal on the body. After one of my long hikes, some of my toenails turn black and fall off... It takes me about three days to recover from the abuse I put myself through." [1]

While he was barely active on his own channel, with just five videos uploaded in total, he was known for being active in the comments of other hiking channels.

Disappearance

In late 2014, Veach posted the following in the comments section for the video Son of an Area 51 Technician that was posted by another channel.

Comment posted by Veach where he first mentions the cave.

In response to this comment, numerous YouTube users encouraged Veach to find the cave and attempt to enter it again, this time documenting what he experienced and uploading it to his channel. In response to this, this time taking a camera with him, Veach set out to locate the cave once more and document his findings for his channel, posting them in his most-viewed video, M Cave Hike - however, he was unable to locate the cave for his video, leading to Veach being criticised by followers of his channel for not being able to provide evidence of the cave that he claimed to have found, with others suggesting Veach try a second time to find the cave. That being said, there was at least one comment left imploring Veach to not go back, fearing that he would be putting his life at risk if he did so. [2]

In response, Veach set out on November 10th 2014 to try and find the cave once more, assuring his followers that he would be safe, and told his family he was embarking on "a short, overnight trip" as he set off.

Comment posted by Veach assuring his followers of his credentials.

Search

When Veach failed to return home, a search was put out to try and locate him, with his disappearance noted by the local news on November 22nd. During the search Veach's cell phone was discovered at the mouth of an abandoned mine shaft,[3] believed by many to be the same mine shaft seen during the M Cave Hike video, but after this the trail went cold - that is until a woman claiming to be Veach's girlfriend posted the following comment in response to the M Cave Hike video, reigniting interest in the case and leading to further speculation about the true cause of Veach's disappearance.

Comment left by the woman purporting to be Veach's girlfriend.

Status of channel

Even though Veach disappeared in November 2014 his channel remains hosted on YouTube.

Findings

The findings in this report are extensive. The following statement was given by the then girlfriend of Kenny.

Sheryon Pilgrim (girlfriend at the time)

I am the girlfriend that Kenny spoke of in the video. There are so many posts. I had no idea until a friend let me know. So many people are wondering what happened and guessing different things. You are heart felt about the sadness around what has happened with Kenny. He has not been found and I feel that he probably will not be found for many, many months, if ever. I want to share what I know and feel about what happened, so that you might bring some closure and understanding in your own lives. Kenny absolutely loved hiking in the desert. It was his very, very favorite thing to do. We hiked and camped together all over the Nevada desert.... sometimes 9 hours in a day. We found many abandoned mining towns, usually referred to as "ghost towns" by Nevada hikers. We explored many caves and mine shafts. We were always careful how we explored them, but Kenny was a bit more daring than I was. We wore snake guards, sun protected clothing, used walking sticks, brought enough water and food for the hiking hours and had extra water/food in the car. (He rarely drank all his water.) We took wonderful pictures of all sorts of things we saw... rusted cars, old falling down buildings, cemeteries, mines, wild animals, tarantulas, scorpions, trees, cactus and flowers. Our deserts are beautiful, if you have a love for deserts. They are not "spooky" scary but you do have to be careful of the terrain and of course bring enough water and food. We always were excited when we saw desert wild life, like the big horn sheep in the video. They are stunningly beautiful to see in person in our desert. We would stand quietly still to watch them as long as possible. I was so very excited to see the one he filmed in his video. I want you to know that I do not think Kenny had an accident. I believe he committed suicide. He battled depression for many years and would not take medication or see a doctor. He quit his job a little more than a year before he disappeared. He wanted to see if he could sell his inventions and do what he called "Cowboy Interior Design" for homes. He bought his first home five years ago and had an amazing ability of decorating in this style. He was not successful in getting a business going and was running out of money after a year of not working. He no longer wanted to work in a "job" for someone else and as his money decreased he became more and more depressed. He really did not look for another job. In early Oct, with seeing his depression increase, I said to him, "You aren't going to pull a Robin Williams on me are you"? This is when he opened up more about his depression and his thoughts much of his life about suicide. His father committed suicide when Kenny was in his early 20's. When I asked him the question he answered me with "If I decide to do it, you will be OK because you are good at the Law of Allowing." He asked me what I would think of him if he did it. He also said if he decided to do it "No one will ever find me." It would be easy to do something like this in our desert with the number of natural caves and mines. He could hike many miles in a day so there is no telling where or how far he could have hiked during his 3 day 2 night solo hike. When he did not call me after the 3rd day of being gone I called missing persons. The search for him was started within a couple days of my call. Over 30 search and rescue team members searched 3 different times on foot. One helicopter fly over was done and there was no trace of Kenny or any of his camping things. They found his car in the area I told them it would be. They did find his cell phone by the mine shaft in the video. The mine shaft was only about a 4 hour hike from his car. It is my feeling he left it behind so that he could not be tracked from the GPS in it. He also did not take his video camera with him on this solo hike. It was left in his home. So, he had no intention of filming anything.

I share this with you for two reasons. First, so that you have more of an understanding who Kenny was and to bring some peace or understanding to the situation. Secondly, if any of you do decide to go out into our desert to look for him or the M Cave, be careful and bring enough water and food. Walking sticks are a good idea and not doing a solo hike. Bring a GPS and make sure that you have let family or friends know that you are heading out for the hike and where and when you will be returning. A search really can't be on a one day hike. You would be repeating much of the same hike....just getting up the mountain and then be left with not many hours in the day to do the search. You would need 2 or 3 days at a time and in the summer, or even late spring, this can not be done because of the heat of our desert. You would not be able to carry enough water. So, please, please be careful. I had many wonderful experience with Kenny and will always remember them and have a place of love in my heart for him and the wonderful things we did together. I am healing from my loss and look forward to new experiences with desert hiking, camping and taking beautiful pictures of our desert. Enjoy your adventures of life and thank you for the kind loving comments sent my way.

Much Love, Sheryon :)

The following comment was made by our previous Agent *****.

“I add that comment because she didn't call the police after day 1. Why wait 3 days? Especially if your that worried?

Also he could have just brought his cell phone with him because he didn't want to carry a camera as he said it was a long hike a hard hike.

If the girlfriend were to call the police, the phone could be pinged as long as it's on.

I think the cell phone was placed at the mineshaft. Only to throw off responders of where he really is, but I believe his body is buried out there. Just not in that place. The cell phone was a distraction. It's too neat.”

“My other question would be is how far did the search teams actually go? Because you can only go so far before you hit area 51. Which by the way, on a sign somewhere says you will be shot on site.

Also, I have been reading some articles about this M cave and how he said it was vibrating and it terrified him. It could very well be a government experiment and not something paranormal or he may have stumbled on to something he shouldn't have. But dealing with Area 51 is very complicated since it's so classified.

However, he did indulge and call out other YouTubers saying he would be able to make the hike.

But more importantly is did they get cadaver dogs in there? Because they would tell a lot.

Was anything found in his truck at all?”

Comment made during investigation by Agent *****.

"I did a phone number reverse lookup for both Sheryon and Kenny. Sheryon was 100 percent match living in north Las Vegas, but it showed near a gas station by the Las Vegas strip.

I did the same thing with Kenny's phone however it showed no results. I then tried again and it gave an 80 percent match to Jeremiah Mills. Someone could have been given the phone number but it did show it was in both Henderson NV and Nelson NV. I couldn't find a relation to the two as of yet."

"I think the abandon gold mine, with little to no information should be investigated. I believe Kenny said he was south of Sheep Peak or range and several miles north of Vegas. However, what is even more interesting is the maps that people drew to find Kenny were all near Gass Peak. June Bug mine is close by. There is also another mine that is directly East of Sheep Peak called Spanish Mine. However, June Bug mine gives off a different vibe and it's not good. He could have very easily got lost and the place might as well be off the map."

"Lat/Long for June Bug Gold mine is 36.3669 N, 115.1723 W. However when I put this on the map it won't take me there and I can't see any pictures. I'm also going to get the Spanish Mine coordinates as well."

"The Spanish Mine has no information on it except on the map you can see its east of Sheep peak and north of June Bug Gold Mine. Lat/Long 36 33 15.5766 N, 115 12 32.3588 W. Also north of there is hidden Forrest cabin, but there is a lot of information on that."

"The Twin Buttes is also not far from the June Gold Mine. As matter of fact, both of the peaks together form an M shape. It could something or it could be nothing."

"So far however, it is still of the belief that Kenny may have been murdered, but, all evidence will need to be reviewed before we can decide that this is the theory we are sticking to. We will also contact the law enforcement that dealt with this case and ask why they never felt the need to interview or even suspect the then girlfriend of Kenny. It seems very strange that she was never a suspect and going through the case multiple times, feels like that either they do not care to help solve this case, or that there may be a cover up.

It should be noted that again, his phone was found placed on the ledge of a mine shaft and that was it. No body was ever found within the shaft nor any other equipment nor clothing was found. Even the area that was searched, came up with nothing, suggesting that the phone was placed there on purpose.

A new theory however must also be explored. It may be the case that Kenny went inside a cave and become stuck, however, nothing came up during the search and rescue missions, so this is only about 5% plausible that this actually happened. To add though, there was what seemed to be a cave that was discovered but had been covered up with a large boulder. This however may just be a coincidence and nothing in that theory at all to suggest Kenny was even in that particular cave.”

+Harry Nafpaktitis I'm going again this weekend. I will be hiking solo for three days. I plan on covering about forty miles. I will cross through the same canyon where I found the cave. If I don't find it again, I will just continue hiking over mountain after mountain to the North of the canyon. I dare any of the people that like to run their mouths on here to join me. My hikes are brutal on the body. After one of my long hikes, some of my toenails turn black and fall off. I lose about thirteen pounds of body weight. It takes me about three days to recover from the abuse I put myself through. But I love every minute of it. There is no guarantee that I will find the cave again. The region that I cover is vast. There are many caves. I have been in hundreds of them. The M cave is the only cave I ever feared going inside. I really want to find it again.

No! Do not go back there. If you find that cave entrance, don't go in, if you do, you won't get out.

+Lemi Killmister What makes you say that?

Odpowiedz · 1

Lemi Killmister was and still is a suspect in this investigation. We believe that this is a false name and the name itself may suggest a more sinister theory.

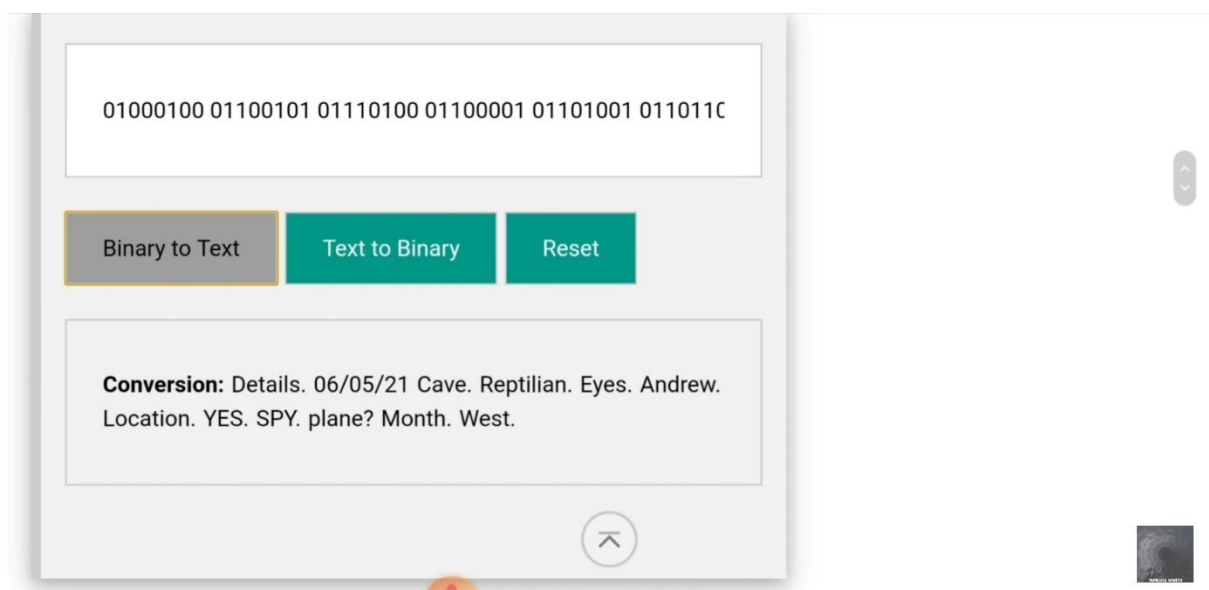

message that Kenny had received from what we believe is a false account.

Another cryptic message that was found during investigation.

This was a comment made on Kenny's final video from his YouTube channel. We are still unsure on why this comment was made in binary but upon conversion it made for interesting reading.

The police department that initially investigated this case were contacted multiple times about their failure to follow up on not only the red flags that were found but also their lack of communication with IBPIR. When we attempted to contact the original investigating officer, it was put to them that the girlfriend of the time should have been a prime suspect, however the comment was declined and further attempts for communication have been denied. This has prompted IBPIR to assign further agents to this case.

Recommendations

Overall, the recommendations that were made from this report were that of further investigation is warranted. There is sufficient evidence to warrant further investigation.

Conclusion

To conclude this report, the findings show that the evidence presented is that of a warranted extension in investigation and that IBPIR will fully lead the case and will give the local authorities the chance to work with the Bureau, in failing this, IBPIR are solely responsible for any further actions.
